

Tool for HeartConnexion® Living

If you could build something what would it be? Would it be an ark?

Noah was considered a righteous man. God's original plan for his creation had been corrupted. Our lives can get corrupted by the LIES that have been told to us and that we have believed. Creation had lost the direction it was intended to go. God invited Noah out of his ordinary life to build an ark because he was going to begin again. New beginnings are a theme we see throughout scripture. Many times we see lives get recreated through the power of God's grace.

Noah sits for the portrait of Arkful Living. Arkful living is adventurous, challenging, and can be fulfilling. It can also be scary, daunting and draining. Ultimately, it requires faith and works, the being and the doing.

Choose to be a builder. You may not know what or how to build.

- Is God leading you to build something?
- What is your passion?
- What dream or desire is beckoning you to start building?
- What is keeping you from starting?
- What resources do you need?
- Who can help you with your building?

Be ready for a long ride. Things may get smelly and there may be rough sailing.

- It's a process. There are no quick fixes.
- What might be the "deep water" you encounter?
- Who might the naysayer's be in your life?
- Who might the cheerleaders be in your life?
- What fears might you have to face?
- What are the challenges?

Watch for signs.

- What are the signs of safety for you?
- Explore new ground, step into new territory.
- Look for the rainbows, God's promises to you.
- It doesn't end here, it is a new beginning.
- What will you build now?

Adventure is not so much about a destination as much as it is about a direction.

What are you being called to build?

Would you be willing to hang your contract above what you've built?
